GIGANTIC RAILROAD.

William Dallin, the railroad promoter, has returned from Europe, where he succeeded in negotiating with a syndicate of English capitalists a loan sufficient to build an air line railroad from New York to San Francisco. It will be known as the Continental line. The main line will run thirty five miles south of Chicago and strike Bourbon. The road will be a double track from start to finish and will be completed to the Chicago point in 1898. The enterprise is backed by $400,000,000 and will be the most gigantic corporation in America.

A MILLION FRIENDS.

A friend in need is a friend indeed, and not less than one million people have found just such a friend in Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. If you have never used this great cough medicine, one trial will convince you that it has wonderful curative powers in diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs. Each bottle is guaranteed to do all that is claimed or money will be refunded. Trial bottles free at A. F. Hargrave's drug store.—Large bottles 50c. and $1.00.

June is the month of roses, so The Art Amateur, in its current issue, appropriately gives a bunch of them (by De Longpre) as one of its color studies, the other being a sunset (landscape) by Annette Moran, entitled "The Last Glow." The frontispiece of this number is a portrait of a lady in renaissance costume, engraved by Bude from a painting by Barentsen. The same engraver furnishes another full page illustration of "The Fisherman's Wife," by Dayrolle. A pen and ink drawing of snowballs by Victor Daugon forms a third page, while a fourth is made up of illustrations of tables of time of Marie Antoinette, this last accompanying a paper of mementoes on the young queen. An article by the late Theodore Child on the National Gallery, one on "Sketching Ground in Holland and Normandy" by H. W. Ranger, papers on flower painting by Patty Thum, and landscape painting in water color by M. B. O. Fowler, descriptions of public sculpture in Chicago, "A Group Exhibition" etc., etc., are special features of the number. The second plate of the fish service (brook trout), by Charles Volkmar appears this month, and "A Modern Interior" is the subject illustrated in the series of house decoration and furnishing. In the department of china painting there are articles on game painting and painting of fish and "A Lesson in Raised Paste Work," and the colonial book plates are continued in the Ex Libris. All the other regular departments (drawing, sketching, modelling, wood carving, etc.) are as usual thoroughly well maintained, and the Note Book, with its fresh and telling comments on the day's art interests, is, if possible, more readable than ever. A REBEL YET.

At a reunion of Confederate veterans held in Richmond some days ago General Thomas L. Rosser said:

"Comrades, when you marched out in '61 you were buoyed by hope of the future. Now you have only the memory of the lost. The great principles which we fought for have been defeated, but they are not dead. We are now only an ambulance corps. But we are here today to do honor to the men who fell, for we love their memory as we love our God. The men who overran us remind me of the locusts which are now infesting portions of this State. They could not whip us, but they devoured our substance. The army that devoured us was an army of substitutes. We killed all the substitutes and the men whom they represented stopped at home and made money, and now draw pensions. I despise the man who gives the United States money to a pensioner. This country can't stand when it makes one citizen support another. I shall never vote for a congressman who is in favor of government pensions. I will say to Massachusetts, you pay your pensioners as Virginia pays hers."

General Rosser then went on to say that the G. A. R. was banded together to get pensions, and if he had been at Birmingham he would have voted against the proposition to invite them to Atlanta. He did not want them to come to Richmond.

"Some time ago," he continued, "we unveiled a monument to the greatest general who ever lived; to day we unveil a monument to the greatest private soldier who ever lived, and in time we will unveil a monument to the President of the Confederate States. But we are mocked at by the north and will live to see the yankee army march again through the south and pull down our monuments. I don't know what sort of stuff the rising generations are made of, but if you and I are living, there will be bloodshed when that is done."

ROSSER CRITICISED.

Boston, June 1.—Captain J. G. B. Adams, the commander in chief of the G. A. R., says in regard to the sentiments expressed by General Rosser at Richmond: "I do not believe it is best to get excited over the statements of Rosser, or any other fire eater of the South. The reputation of the Union veterans is secure. There never was a time since the close of the war when the loyal people of the country believed in them more than they do today. Having whipped the rebels and secured the blessings of national life to the South as well as to the North we can rest on our arms."

"The grand army of the republic will continue in the same line it has maintained for twenty-eight years. We have all we can do to carry out our work of charity, to teach patriotism to children in the public schools, without paying attention to the twaddle of such men as Rosser."

"To reply to his statements would be just what he desires, and I don't propose to magnify him by so doing."

WHAT WE DID NOT BURY.

Of course the war is over. This is one country. Southern girls have given their hearts to gallant Northern warriors and Northern girls have brightened the lives of Southerners the same way. In business and commercial lines the once hostile sections are closely knit. The fact is now notorious that the South is the most conservative section of the United States, and is the best place for the investment of capital, and is, more than others, the section for men who would own and live in their homes.

But when some of the Northern critics of the oration of Rev. Mr. Cave took loggish hints that his speech would scare away immigration they measure the immigrant by their own measure of an inch for a yard. The best man with whom to deal as an individual, the best man with whom to deal as a people, is the man and are the people, full of what is called truth. Putting aside, for argument's sake, the higher considerations, we will say that the man who in order to sell his land or his wares goes back on his former life, and gives the lie to his former words and actions could not be trusted in a matter of business. Coming to the loftier consideration we will say that a people with such a character could not be the people among whom a home would be desirable.

The Southern people's convictions are not thrown in to be sold with their lands. They do not traffic with honor on a bargain counter. The ashes of the Confederate dead are the ashes of men who believed when they died. The men who today wallow in the ashes believe in them now as fully as when each handful of that dust was a living entity, an enclosure of a manly heart, a reservoir of patriotic purpose, a home of an aspiring soul. The only part of them we did not bury was their truth—State

THE SILVER AGITATION.

The silver agitation is making a great stir but the benefits from it will be nothing compared with the investment of a silver quarter in Simmons Liver Regulator powder. It agitates the liver and cures Biliousness and Sick Headache.

MR CAVE'S RELIGION.

The fact that the name of the Rev. R. C. Cave, of St. Louis, who delivered the oration on the occasion of the unveiling of the Confederate Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument last Wednesday, has since that time figured conspicuously in a large number of Southern journals, which commented upon his speech in the most flattering terms, while many of the Northern papers, as was expected, were quite bitter in their criticisms, some making reference to Mr. Cave's religious views in rather disparaging language, has aroused general interest in the orator. Before the oration was delivered, however, there were many contradictory rumors about the speaker's opinions on the subject of religion, and some of the rumors went so far as to pronounce Mr. Cave an infidel.

Mr. Cave, who was formerly pastor of the Seventh Street Christian church in this city, resigned his pastorate here to accept a similar one in St. Louis. According to his own statement, he had not served very long before some differences of opinion in religious matters sprang up between the pastor and some of the members of the church. He held that immersion was not essential for fellowship into the membership of the church, and this, together with some other differences, which will be mentioned later, rendered it practically in the eyes of the pastor that he resign his charge. There was no general division or bad feeling in the church, and the resignation which was quietly tendered, was as quietly accepted.

FORMED ANOTHER CHURCH.

Upon the withdrawal of the pastor, who had no other immediate charge in view, some thirty members of the congregation who agreed with the doctrines as set forth by Mr. Cave, withdrew from the church and asked him to become their pastor.

THEY WERE KNOWN AS INDEPENDENTS. This he consented to do, and the organization began to grow, and it was not long before they found it necessary to secure larger quarters.

They erected a comfortable house of worship on a desirable lot, the whole costing about $28,000 and with a membership at present of about three hundred, the organization is known as the Non-Sectarian church, of St. Louis. This church, together with many other similar organizations in various parts of the country, is under the supervision of the American Independents Religious Society, with headquarters at Chicago, and bears a similar relation to the society as the several evangelical churches to their respective conventions. Absolute freedom of religious thought is the principle underlying the organization, and the members of the church differ among themselves in religious belief as they see fit, each following his own views. The church has no fixed creed, and in many cases the members differ materially with the pastor. The organization has for its object the elevation of mankind, and inquiry into truth and righteousness, and high moral character from whatever source available.

NOT A CHRISTIAN.

When asked about his individual views Mr. Cave said that he was a strong advocate of free religious thought, and had no settled creed for any man. He believed every one ought to follow where his convictions led, whatever those convictions were, after gaining all the available light from every source. One of the points wherein he differed with the members of the Christian (or Disciples) church was that he did not believe in the divinity of Christ as set forth in the New Testament. He thought Jesus was a great and good man, and led a high and strictly moral life that might serve as an example for humanity, but nothing more.

Mr. Cave further said that he did not believe the Scriptures were inspired; that the Bible was full of valuable truth, but that the men who wrote it were by no means infallible, and that the Bible was by no means the only book from which religious truth and righteousness could be gathered. He believed in gathering all the valuable truth from the Scriptures, and then supplementing it by other truth. He did not believe in confining a man to a creed, but let every one think for himself.

"Thus there are no religious opinions requisite for fellowship into your church?" I asked.

"Absolute freedom of thought," said he, "is our motto. All we require is that a man shall try to gather all the light available as to how to live and follow the highest standard of right according to his information to the best of his ability. We admit nobody who is striving to do right. I should not hesitate to admit into my church a Gnostic."

M. Hammerly, a well-known business man of Hillsboro, Va., sends this testimony to the merits of Ayer's Sarsaparilla: "Several years ago, I hurt my leg, the injury leaving a sore which led to erysipelas. My sufferings were extreme, my leg from the knee to the ankle, being a solid sore, which began to extend to other parts of the body. After trying various remedies, I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had finished the first bottle, experienced great relief; the second bottle effected a complete cure."
